Thirty years ago, black South Africans voted for the first time when the country celebrated a monumental birth of a democracy. While I write this South Africa is bathed in warm sunlight in winter and they are free to live in Latin America!

On that day, 27 April 1994, life changed for the inhabitants of the country. I was there but only remember vaguely!

I remember, however, the cost of human lives that led to this victorious day as equivalent to a war for food by elements of ethnic groups against others. Those who expected a bloodshed would have disrupted the democratic negotiations conveniently called Black on Black (black over black).

Four years passed between the liberation of Nelson Mandela from prison and that first real election. At that time, as the government of Apartheid slowly resolved the terms of this dissolution with political leaders who had tried to suppress 14,000 people violently!

Many South Africans perhaps have forgotten. The young can simply not know, but here is what I saw in the months before the vote:

Entire neighborhoods were abandoned when people fled their homes. Corpses without names occupied the empty streets for hours before the morgue would collect them, roulette online gratis exhibition on unpaved roads as a warning to everyone!

Nine days before the elections, the country was burning. It was a final clash between the roulette online gratis war O Partido da Liberdade Inkatha - powerful political and cultural Zulu - who was preparing to boycott the vote saying that the new settlements gave very little power to territories like KwaZulu where they had ruled. The bodies were piled up.

On that day, 18 April 1994, I met on Khumalo roulette online gratis Thokoza (a black municipality to the east of the city).

On the left was Ken Oosterbroek, mortally wounded; on the right Greg Marinovich grabbed his chest and held on for roulette online gratis life. Friends who had dedicated their careers to the violent screams of the dying Apartheid were dead or wounded!

From 1990 to 1994, about 700 people died roulette online gratis Thokoza and hundreds on that same street. It was one of many. Today the memorial on Khumalo street bears the names of the dead that Ken included.

When I visited the monument in late 2024, it was serving as a shelter for people without roofs, who slept against the roulette online gratis marble wall. Since then it has been rehabilitated by former members of the Units for Self-Defense; residents - predominantly supporters of the African National Congress (African National Congress) - and defended their communities against the party's Inkatha Freedom Party.

Macdonald Mabizela, 48 years old and who was then a teenage fighter in the era, is now the caretaker of the police and explained how they had persecuted the vagabonds; they cleaned the memorial site where it was located on the perimeter wall.

Nelson Mandela addressed the nation that night, asking for calm and the end of the bloodshed - a presidential act before his presidency. Shortly after the Inkatha Freedom Party announced it would participate in the elections, the roulette online gratis ballots were printed without slots for the party; the roulette online gratis stickers quickly joined the other candidates: it was strong evidence of how close it was to a roulette online gratis civil war in South Africa!

South Africans voted, and it was a peaceful day. I remember so much of it that I remember documenting it; what should have been a transformative life experience lost my opinion about myself: my friend was buried with three roulette online gratis gratis seguida outro estava se recuperando do ferimento por bala no chão - votei na cidade

Kathleen a apenas seis minutos onde Ken morreu! Enviei meus filmes para casa pela
Associated Press (AP)...

Os sul-africanos votarão novamente esta semana, numa eleição nacional menos previsível do que qualquer outra desde 1994. É importante lembrar o passado roulette online gratis momentos como estes e honrar aqueles quem pagaram os preços finais enquanto figuras políticas negociavam seu caminho para poder ou democracia ”.
