Apresentversoesteve que rodounoYouTube é sobre aNetflix. O próprio senhorio do canal, Jhoanner, already threatened to leave the subscription service if changes weremade to the algorithm that determines which videos appear first on the site. A sistemaungs its recommendations, which many content creators fear will harm their visibility and revenue.

Srsallycohen, a spokesperson for YouTube, said the changes are aimed at promoting more diverse content and combating misinformation.

Meanwhile, a group of creators, including Markiplier, JackSepticEye and PewDiePie, are promoting a new platform called N-Castro. Its founders claim it will allow creators to have more control over their content and revenue and escape the strict rules of YouTube. The platform officially launches in April, but access is already available to some content creators. Markiplier, also known as Fischbach, said on Twitter that he is already moving his content to the new platform for good. Other influencers, like Viirsango, have expressed their concerns about the upcoming changes on social media. "To all my YouTube friends, fam, collabststants, and really anyone who's supported and still supports me and other creators I can't thank you enough for absolutely everything. In light of recent events, I'm very grateful for you guys," she posted on Instagram. "Instead of trying to steal views and clicks, maybe help us make a change to the best interests of creators and users on a bigger scale. Now it's time for change, which means moving away from YouTube," she stated.

In Brazil, popular YouTubers such as Felipe Neto and LuCCas have made public their intention to leave the platform. The debate has been closely followed by influencers and their fans and has sparked discussions about the future of content creation on the internet.

Alanap Saints, Mariane Gabriely, Luara Fonseca, Larissa Manoela, Lais Brasil, Kleber Cicip, Nego Di closely follow the changes at YouTube. Speaking exclusively to Marie Claire, Anitta expressed her uncertainty about the future of content creation on the platform. "We don't know what will happen with our channel. For now, we're just focusing on our content and trying to deliver what our audience loves. I personally believe that this change will bring good things for us because, as a content creator it is a bit frustrating to see something that you worked hard on and poured your heart and soul into just be buried by YouTube's mysterious algorithm," she said.

This Tuesday, the Supreme Court will judge whether or not there is censorship of public opinion. Brazilian creators are divided on the matter. Keyolly Rcco, 25, said that without the changed algorithm, content creators have nothing left but opinions. "As an individual, I would argue that my freedom of speech is restricted," she said. A controversial video of a teacher, Dayane Oliveira, has sparked debate about hate speech on YouTube. The platform's algorithm promotes offensive videos, critics say. Education Minister Abraham Weintraub told TA Times that it is difficult to separate freedom of expression from offensive material. Carola Blatter Soares wants to encourage healthy debate on YouTube. The First Amendment is not unlimited and hate speech is a serious problem, according to Carola.

From the beginning of this year to last March, Amora Panna had three million visits per day. Today it's at two point five million. To access N-Castro, users must register and download desktop applications and mobile apps because the system is not yet available on Firefox or Chrome. Unlike YouTube, N-Castro does not filter user interactions, including 'dislikes' and 'Disagrees'. Users decide what remains and what doesn't, giving creators the chance to monetize their work via tips. Since leaving YouTube means giving up millions of views and subscribers Anastasia suggests making decisions based on specific circumstances. Although the creator will launch N-Castro, it will continue exclusively on YouTube with its nine point five million subscribers. Influential makeup artist Sir Spahling's first video on the new platform shows him applying makeup on his dog. "That definitely drew people's attention," Spahling said. The Brazilian government has passed a law against "hate press," but cannot yet confirm the authenticity of content creators' complaints about YouTube's algorithm change. Minister Weintraub mentioned abiding by the rules that "one can criticize, it annoys others, causes discomfort, but they cannot infringe on another's freedom."
